Greenwich Japanese School | English Newsletter

Greenwich Japanese School wishes our students, staff and their families a healthy and happy year! A new year brings people new hopes and possibilities. What are your hopes and dreams for this year? What about for your future? Would you ever consider working on a job that is dangerous? That is a question 9th graders were asked to think about. The class began with a discussion of unique jobs and realized unique jobs tended to be dangerous. So, which jobs are deemed dangerous? 9th graders each researched on a dangerous job and shared information with the class. The dangerous jobs presented were a volcanologist, a bush pilot and a high-rise window washer. Each student described what kind of work was done and presented possible dangers on the job. When they were asked if they would consider any of the jobs, they all answered 'No,' understandably. The students practiced using 2nd conditionals (I would ... if ...) in discussing the possibilities.
