GREENWICH JAPANESE SCHOOL

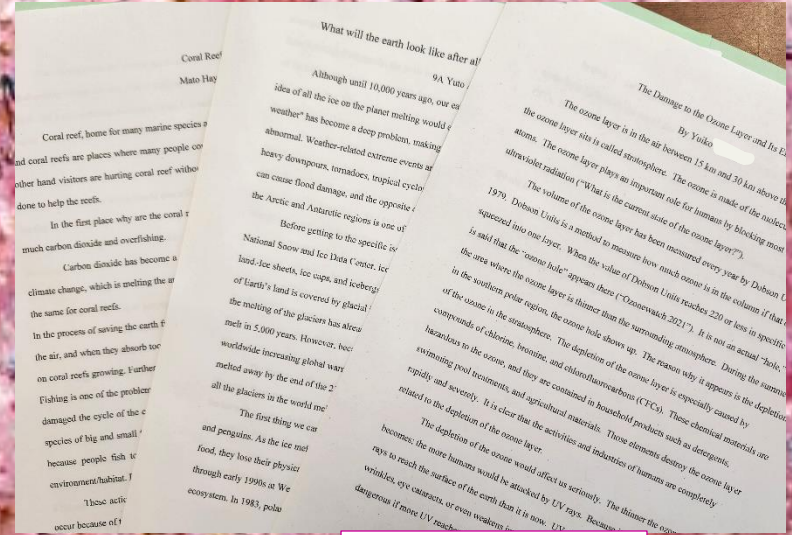

Welcome and welcome back! A new school year has started! We have new teachers, new classroom arrangements, and new flowers in the garden. Of course, we also have new English classes!

Our students are already hard at work. Some of the ninth-grade students have started out the year with a small research project. In honor of Earth Day, each student chose a topic related to the environment to research. Topics include important issues such as the depletion of the ozone layer, damage to coral reefs, and what will happen if the glaciers melt.

After learning about proper formatting for citations and reference pages, students used the Internet to research their topic and take notes, then composed a summary of their findings as well as opinions and suggestions for how we can better protect our environment.
